Empower Students

Think Analytically

Students must analyze the state of the whole game in order to make their best moves, and to predict their opponents moves.

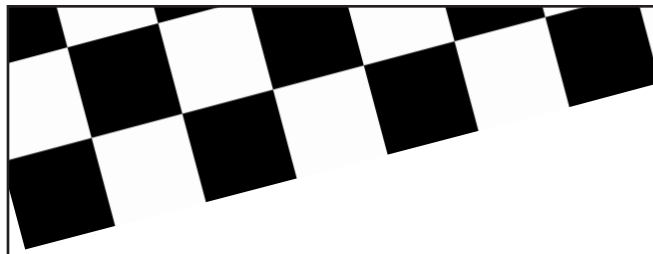

Chess has countless strategies, positions, and tactics that truly test students' depth of thought.

Build Patience

Students record and analyze their games in post-tournament review sessions to learn from their mistakes and optimize their strategies for future games.

In addition, there are countless records of masterful chess games throughout history that students can study and learn new skills.

Spark Friendships

Through frequent meetings and training sessions at many local schools, students can play with and compete with friends.

These friendships help the players to grow as fair and friendly competitors and to be involved in their local communities.
